STROKE ORDER

Kanjidoku, Volume Four · JLPT N1

All 705 characters in the book, drawn stroke by numbered stroke at almost three times the size the book can spare for them. Free to print, free to share.

Stroke orders for N1 characters start from page 26.

Reading the diagrams

Each square holds one character with a small number at the start of every stroke, in the order the strokes are drawn. Follow them in sequence and you are writing the character the way it is written. The dotted cross is there to judge proportion: most of a character's legibility lives in how it sits in the square rather than in the strokes themselves.

Two rules cover most characters, and both are visible in every diagram here: top before bottom, and left before right. Where they conflict, a horizontal stroke usually comes before the vertical one crossing it. 十 is drawn across, then down.

Stroke order is not pedantry. It is what keeps a character legible when you write it quickly, it is how handwriting recognition on a phone decides what you meant, and it is how a paper dictionary is indexed.

This volume has no writing-practice pages: those pages went into ten more puzzles instead. So these are its stroke orders, and there is nothing in the book they repeat. They run easiest level first, and within a level the ones the puzzles use most. The printed form of each character sits under its diagram, next to its level and stroke count, because the stroke-order face is not the face the grids are set in and it is worth seeing both.

Copy this, please. It is free to print and free to share, whole and unmodified, including by teachers and study groups. It may not be sold. The latest version is always at kanjidoku.net/strokes.

One character, seven strokes

言 means say, or word, and it is a good first one to build: seven strokes, no surprises, and both rules on the page before this one are visible in it. The new stroke is black in each square and the ones already drawn are grey.

1 the top mark

2 the long line

3 a shorter line

4 and one more

5 down the left

6 across, then down

7 close the base

Printed and written are not quite the same printed

written

The same character, twice. On the left is the face the puzzle grids are set in; on the right is the face every model in this book is drawn in. Look at the top stroke: printed it is a flat bar, written it is a short tick coming down to the right. The box underneath leans, too, because a hand draws it in one movement rather than squaring it off.

Neither is wrong. Type is drawn to sit in a line of text and handwriting is drawn to be written, and a few characters differ between the two by more than 言 does: 令 and 糸 are the ones learners notice next. What changes is the shape of a mark, not the order you draw them in, so the numbers on these pages hold either way. Copy the written form and your writing will look like handwriting rather than like a font.

Kanjidoku

Sudoku with kanji instead of digits. Solve the grid, read the shaded cells in numbered order, and you have a real Japanese word built from characters you have just spent twenty minutes with. Every grid is solvable by logic alone, every hidden word is checked in a dictionary with the reading the book prints, and every character reading is checked against KANJIDIC.

This supplement covers the 705 characters in Volume Four. Each volume has its own.

Kanjidoku N5 and N4.

Where the series starts: about 280 characters, six four-by-four warm-ups, and the vocabulary everything after it assumes.

Kanjidoku N3.

About 370 characters, and the compounds the sets here treat as ordinary words.

Kanjidoku N2.

About 370 more, and the book just before this one.
